VMware.Collision-induced dissociation of thiophilic ions for mass spectrometric structural investigations. The use of thiophilic ion traps (TIPs) has opened the field of chemical ionization for applications in biological mass spectrometry. However, chemical modification of samples can occur at various ionization and activation steps, leading to different biomolecules, which results in an incomplete ionization and activation of the biological molecules studied. In this paper, a new electrospray ionization/source fragmentation method is proposed, which is based on the collision-induced dissociation of thiophilic ions in the TIP, directly resulting in single ion fragmentations (SI), tandem mass spectrometric fragmentation (MS(2)) and tandem mass spectrometric fragmentation (MS(3)) of the compounds studied. This method allows the structural investigation of thiophilic ions to be performed without any chemical modification of the biological molecules. The main steps involved in the proposed ionization method include thiophilic ion formation by electrospr
